

My parents came across Classic Video Productions at the Wedding House one day whilst walking into Liverpool City Centre. They knew that we wanted a videographer for our wedding and with time to kill, dropped in to meet Andy and Margaret. When they phoned me later that evening to tell me about the most amazing company they had ever come across, I thought that they were exaggerating. In essence, we visited Classic Videos simply to keep the peace. However, once there we quickly realised just how special this company was. My now husband and I realised instantaneously that this was the special company that we wanted to record our special day.

The way in which Andy and Margaret remain professional yet caring and interested is unique. They must record hundreds of weddings, yet when they are with you on the day as well as preparing and after care, they always make you feel like yours is the only wedding they are working on.

During the day, (filming) just trust what Andy says, he knows what he's doing and the final product will be out of this world. Andy has perfected the art of making you and your entire wedding party feels at complete ease. In fact, it often feels like he is one of the invited guests who has been asked to record the day. The way in which he worked with the photographer, make-up artists, hairdresser, and wedding cars was also exemplary. As a bride you have only two things to worry about on your special day, getting ready and looking beautiful, Classic Videos are a perfect example of a company who go the extra mile to ensure that this is true.

Margaret and Andy tell you from the onset what will happen and when. They are a company who stay true to their word. Timescales are not exaggerated; they are there for a purpose. Classic Videos met each and every one of the deadlines that they sent us. Admittedly, we were desperate to see the video, but the wait was certainly worthwhile. The result, not simply a wedding video, but instead a unique feature length film of our truly special day.

I would unreservedly recommended Classic Video Productions to anybody who wants to capture that special moment for a lifetime.

Thank you once again, we feel very blessed to have met you and our overwhelmed at how sensational our video actually is.
